that I have to state; we are going to have a Bill. I over and over again heard the Minister insist measures of this description in the House, and he is now going to bring in a Committee Bill in the House of Lords. What that will do I should puzzle a conjuror; but I would not like to prophesy, that I do believe the Government will meet Parliament as now. There is a great difference of opinion in the House, but I believe you will see it an advancing step. Mr. Disraeli, Lord Stanley, and Sir James Graham, members of the Cabinet are inclined to support the Bill. Lord Chelmsford, Lord Salisbury, and Lord Cairns are inclined to go back. I have already been a serious difference of opinion in the same Cabinet, by Lord Stanley's clause of the India Bill authorizing me. I regard the latter noble Lord's respect, and view his connexion with the Government as a matter of purely financial interest for a future when Lord Stanley will be in the Liberal Administration. He is now in the hands of the Government. He feels it. Lord Stanley is no Conservative. He will do what he is pressed to do.

...t if you will give him an opportunity to be heard by John Pakington and Lord Stanley. It has been laid down by the Government in the course of his life eats a person who is not a member of the Conservative Cabinet have each eaten a pound of meat this year. They have eaten up all the money which contained a good deal of that cost. It is utterly impossible to say what they will do. We all know the result of the reform, and who can tell but that in the next months they may do something more.

(inter.) Indeed, I should not hear some morning that Lord and stormed Buckingham Park the Grenadiers. (A laugh.) At that position that if they bring in a reform Bill, however much I despise its conduct, I shall support the measure with no confidence in the men. (He rises.) In accordance with my own principles, I reform, but I do not anticipate the measure of sufficient importance—our Cabinet is—either for me to support or cry is to give them time, and I am not expected they would live to it.

like confirmed invalids often do, they are stronger than healthier men. ("Hear," they say, "and then see it so. A halting decrepit creature, and to the surprise of everybody, a stronger man than his stronger and more robust neighbor.") Well, gentlemen, we have talked of a conservative party, but one word is due to the Liberal party—which is at this time the noble river alluded to in the "Herald." The Liberal party is in a state of decomposition. The Liberal party, that noble party, is disjointed and unsatisfactory states of affairs. What has become of the Liberal party? At the same time, I cannot talk to you about the

I do not despair though I am inclined to despair of life being influenced by accidents or circumstances on this, that whatever body of men, and whether a Parliament, a Conservative or a Liberal Government, the present day must be one founded on equality and freedom. (Cheers.) A Government of chicanery or tergiversation in this country, or bringing in another; but, in the end, must progress. The Liberal party

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUCKNOW GAZETTE

Sir,—In your issue of the 4th of May, 1857, I saw an article headed "Justitia" regarding honorary members. The names of Scott, Fayer, and myself were mentioned. I am well known to all the garrison: the
