an interest altogether opposed to that of the community. The interest of the public is to deter from crime; the object of the staff of a goal is to make men behave well in prison.

The Mormon rebellion appears likely to terminate without any of the catastrophes which were anticipated and proclaimed. When the Federal Government of the United States despatched a military force against the Mormon capital, for the purpose of re-establishing the authority of its officers in the territory, various opinions were circulated respecting the probable result of so remarkable an expedition. The Mormons themselves were at first threatened resistance to the utmost. Though the numbers of the community were small and its resources insignificant compared with the might of the Union, yet the country was protected by distance, by deserts, and by natural barriers of astonishing strength; the population had been trained to arms, and was presumptuously animated by the most powerful of passions, while numerous hands of Indians were said to have promised alliance and co-operation. These advantages might enable the Mormons to maintain themselves for a season against even the force of the Supreme Government of America, and if at last they should be overpowered it was announced that they would prefer exile to submission, that they would once more sacrifice their homes and settlements for the sake of religious freedom, and that with their flocks and herds, their wives and children, their privileges and their institutions, they would seek a new asylum from the oppression of their persecutors. It could not be denied that these menaces were likely enough to be fulfilled, for the Mormons had before now braved all the perils of emigration for the sake of their liberty. They had given up the abode of their choice—the city and temples of their own construction—and had passed in their wanderings over half the breadth of the American Continent to a new home. To secure themselves from molestation they had penetrated the vast wilderness of the West, and had established themselves in a country which till then had never been trodden by white men's feet. There they had pitched their tents and reared their temples anew, and there was nothing improbable in the supposition that what they had done once they might do again. Such, however, has not been the issue of the second trial. The latest intelligence from Utah, reaching to the 3d of July, informs us that after an abortive demonstration of flight the Mormons have recaptured their homes in all parts of the territory; that the new Federal officers were installed in their appointments, and prepared for the regular discharge of their duties; that the military force was encamped peaceably outside the capital, and that BRIGHAM YOUNG had volunteered to meet a charge of treason in a court of justice, provided only that the jury were of the Mormon faith. Thus, we presume, has terminated an expedition which 12 months ago was regarded as fraught with extraordinary embarrassments. Civil war, shocking bloodshed, unnatural strife, and prolonged conflict formed but part of the anticipated difficulties. Though there could be no comparison between the relative forces of the combatants, yet the position of the Mormons was so strong, their isolation so complete, and the hardships of the route so novel, that nobody could calculate the costs or demands of the expedition if the struggle should be prolonged. The Army Estimates of the Union had already been materially increased, and it was said that a column of troops would probably be despatched from the side of California. All these hazards, however, have now been escaped. The United States' troops have obtained quiet command of the Mormon country, and the Mormons themselves, instead of migrating to British Columbia or Northern Mexico, have chosen to submit, like the rest of their countrymen, to the authorities constitutionally provided.

The result is probably due to a combination of causes. We were never of opinion that BRIGHAM YOUNG would persist in his resolution of open war, for so sagacious a leader must have been well aware that the end of such a contest, however it might be retarded, could be nothing but defeat and ruin. The migration, however, of the community was a more likely event, and it was, perhaps, only on a review of existing circumstances that this alternative was given up. The truth is that such a movement would be far more difficult at present than in past times. The ground is more occupied and the course is less clear. Solitudes are now getting scarce, even in Western America. The nearest province of the British dominions on which the Mormon leaders might possibly have cast their eyes has recently been transformed, by the discoveries of gold, from an unknown wilderness to a renowned and attractive colony. Between British Columbia, too, and Utah lie the spacious territories of Washington and Oregon, just now swarming with Indians in arms. To the south lies the vast district of New Mexico, hitherto, indeed, almost desolate, but already marked out for the new State of Arizona, which would thus be brought close upon any settlement of the Mormons in the Mexican provinces of Sonora or Chihuahua. A successful migration, therefore, would be no easy matter. The way would be long and difficult, the asylum precarious, and the end uncertain. Beyond, however, and above all these considerations, we suspect that motives of a more common-place kind have been at work in the minds of the Mormons.

It is easier to move a congregation than to transplant a colony. The Mormons have taken firmer hold in Utah than they did in Illinois; they have a greater stake in their settlement, and are less disposed to sacrifice it. Among a numerous and scattered population there must necessarily be many unsuspicious of that resolve which would be imposed upon a select band of enthusiasts. When the Mormons left Nauvoo they were probably little above 3,000 in number; indeed, they are known to have been fewer than 5,000 after two years of prosperity and triumph in their new abode. They are now probably nearer 30,000 than 25,000, and in the eleven years which have elapsed since the foundation of the Great Salt Lake City their numbers have sprung up. In the names of Nephi, Provo, Lehi, Farmington, Ogden, and Brownsville we recognize the mixture of Saxon ideas and legendary fable which characterizes the institutions of the community; but we discern also an element of greater stability than existed when its whole body could be congregated round a single tabernacle. It is probable that among so many hardy and self-relying husbandmen there are not a few whose faith in their elders is limited, and who, notwithstanding their nominal creed, are by no means disposed to desert their homes and possessions at the call of a spiritual chief. Possibly, too, they may feel but little regret at the announcement that this chief's administration is now to be qualified by the current laws of the land.

This, in fact, is the feature in the transaction which should be most satisfactory to all. Unfortunately, in discussing this question we feel an interest deeper and more abiding than could be excited by any similar incident of purely foreign history. It is a domestic, if not a national, concern with us. These 30,000 Mormons comprise hundreds of English families, carried away by delusion from their native homes to the City of the Desert, and it is in the highest degree desirable that they should at least be secured in liberty of conscience and person. There is every reason for believing that hitherto tyranny has been unscrupulously at work. When the dreams of superstitious delusion were dispelled by actual experience of the promised land the weapons of spiritual despotism were at hand to compel obedience. No release from Mormonism was permissible in the Mormon city. The miserable dupes whose eyes had been opened were forced against their will to remain in bondage, for BRIGHAM YOUNG and his colleagues, by repudiating the authority of the Supreme Government, had installed themselves in temporal as well as spiritual power. This is the condition of Mormon life which is now happily abolished. Under the predominant administration of Federal officers there will at least be freedom in Utah, and if this monstrous superstition is still to exercise an influence it will only be the influence of pure delusion, unsupported by the appliances of obscurity and terror.

THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH.

The following message has been received at the office of the Atlantic Telegraph Company from Valentia, by British and Irish Magnetic Telegraph.

The receipt of a message of 26 words yesterday evening from Newfoundland, relative to signals and instruments, has satisfied me as to the cause of delay in the full and free interchange of messages; they now read and acknowledge our words accurately. We can receive at very good speed from Valentia, and can send at the same rate to Valentia. I hope to be able to transmit the message from Her Majesty to the President this afternoon.

THE PENINSULAR MAILS.

(By Electric and International Telegraph.)

SOUTHAMPTON, FRIDAY NIGHT.
The Tagus steamer, Captain Christian, has arrived with mails from Gibraltar of the 5th; Cadiz, 6th; Lisbon, 9th; Oporto, 10th. She carries 73 passengers, 4,694 lb. of specie, 219 chests of lemons, 205 boxes of grapes, 130 boxes of eggs, and sundries. On August 11th, at 12 noon, the ship the British ship St. George arrived; on the 9th, of the River Tagus, spoke the steamer Braganza, and the schooner Mar Watson. On the 10th she passed the Alhambra steamer in Vigo Bay, at 3 p.m., outward bound.

The Lisbon Correo was holding night and day sitting to get through the hot weather before the new legislative session, to commence in November.

Sir Morton Peto had a large staff of engineers at work to prepare the plans for the sections of railway he had recently agreed to construct between Lisbon and Oporto. A political opponent, not participated in by the public, had been raised against the arrangement before it had been published or understood; but the Ministers had laid it before the Cortes, and directed it to be printed in the Gazette, with such explanations as had checked misrepresentations and rendered the sanction of the Legislature more certain.

Brazil bills on London having become more abundant on the 10th, 11th, and 12th, were sent for this packet at 53, and bill-received over. Nothing worthy of note on other places was obtained, the sales being Paris, 53; Hamburg, 47; Amsterdam, 42; and Genoa, 53. Three per cent. stock had been sold, with the exception of Deferred, which was in demand at 29 to 30. Registered stock at 47 to 48, and Consols at 45 to 46. Bank Stock was without alteration.

Gibraltar advice anticipated by the Sultan.

THE QUEEN IN GERMANY.

(From the Court Circular.)

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 11.
Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Prince Consort arrived at the mouth of the Scheldt in the Victoria and Albert Royal yacht at about half-past 6 o'clock yesterday evening. A Royal salute was fired from the fort at Flushing as the Royal yacht passed.

At half-past 8 o'clock the anchor was dropped for the night, and at 4 o'clock this morning the yacht again weighed and proceeded to Antwerp, where it arrived at about 6 o'clock.

At 10 o'clock the Colonel de Moreskro, Master of the Horse to the King of the Belgians, and General Chasle, one of His Majesty's Aides-de-camp, came on board to report to Her Majesty the arrangements made by the King, and to attend upon Her Majesty. Lord Howard de Walden, Her Majesty's Minister at the Court of Brussels, and Mr. Graham, the British Consul, likewise paid their respects to Her Majesty.

At a quarter before 10 o'clock the Queen and Prince Consort landed in the State barge of His Majesty the King of the Belgians, at the Quai, where the Royal carriages were in attendance, and conveyed Her Majesty, His Royal Highness the Prince Consort, and the Queen's children, to the Hotel de Ville. In attendance were Lady Macdonald, Lady in Waiting; the Hon. Caroline Cavendish, Maid of Honour; the Earl of Malmesbury, Secretary of State; Colonel de Moreskro, and General Chasle, of the Household of the King of the Belgians; Colonel the Hon. A. N. Hood, and Mr. de Brouckere, in Waiting; Colonel the Hon. Sir G. Phipps, K.C.B., and Sir James Clark.

At Malines His Majesty the King of the Belgians, with their Royal and Imperial Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Brabant, received Her Majesty, and accompanied her to Versailles, where they took their leave. Upon arriving at Aix-la-Chapelle Her Majesty and the Prince were met by His Highness the Prince of Prussia, and a numerous and brilliant staff. His Royal Highness proceeded with Her Majesty from Aix-la-Chapelle to Düsseldorf, at which station the Prince and Princess Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen were in waiting to receive the Queen.

The carriage of the Prince of Hohenzollern was in attendance, and Her Majesty the Queen, the Prince of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, the Prince Consort, and the Prince of Prussia, and the ladies and gentlemen in attendance, to the Breitenbach Hof.

The Prince of Hohenzollern escorted Her Majesty on horseback. The town was spontaneously and beautifully decorated by the inhabitants, and Her Majesty was received everywhere with the loudest acclamations.

The Queen and the Prince Consort will dine this evening with the Prince and Princess of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen.

POTSDAM, AUG. 12.

The Queen and Prince Consort arrived here at 10 o'clock this evening, all well.

HAYDOCK'S VOLUNTEER CAVALRY.

The following is a copy of General Sir James Outram's letter taking leave of this gallant force—

London, March 29.
“My dear Barrow,—We are about to separate, perhaps for ever; but, believe me, I shall ever retain you in affectionate remembrance, and ever speak with that intense interest which I feel for the glorious Victoria which you have commanded with such distinction. It would afford me much pleasure to shake every one of them by the hand and tell them how warmly I feel towards them, but this is impossible; my pressing duty will not allow me even to write a few farewell lines to each of your officers; but I trust that your communications to them individually will be an affectionate and sincere wish for their prosperity and happiness.”

“Ever yours sincerely and attached friend,”

“To Major Barrow, Commanding Haydock's Volunteer Cavalry, Knowlton.”

Sir J. LAWRENCE.—We are enabled to state that Sir John Lawrence will not leave his post in India until the tranquillity of the country is restored, though he is most anxious to return to England, and though, but for the insurrection, he would have returned last winter. It is in contemplation of his return, which is so far contingent, that the offer of a place in the Council will be made him, conditional on his ability to accept it, and with the option of his retaining, or resigning, if he should hereafter desire to resume his present post in India.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer acknowledges the receipt of the second half of a bank-note for 50. No. 30728, on account of income-tax, from the Hon. and Right Honourable Sir J. Lubbock, Bart., M.P., also the first half of bank-note for 100. No. 10790, and 50. No. 65312, and 14s. 6d. in postage stamps, on account of income-tax, from “F.”

FATAL COACH ACCIDENT.—On Sunday night, about 9 o'clock, an accident, which caused the death of a gentleman and very serious injuries to a lady, led to a quarrel between Worcester and Malvern. Mr. George Jackson Page, the unfortunate deceased, was a commercial traveller in the service of Messrs. Walkden and Sons, 25, Lawrence-lane, Chesham, London, and had been spending the Sunday with Mr. P. Joyce, of St. John's, Worcester, who accompanied him from his home to meet the coach, and saw him safely upon it opposite the Bell Inn. The deceased was 52 years of age. Mr. Churchman, wife of a whitensmith and balisapher, of Malvern, had her leg broken and her arm dislocated, besides several bruises. Worcester Chronicle.

INDIA AND CHINA.

By the arrival of the Calcutta mail at Marseilles we have received our private correspondence from India and China. The following is the letter of our Calcutta correspondent:—

CALCUTTA, JULY 3.

Gwalior fell upon the 19th of June. On the 17th an engagement was fought in the cantonment of Morar, of which we are as yet totally without particulars. On the 18th Brigadier Smith, who was advancing from Seepree with his brigade, was attacked by a division of the insurgents, headed by the Rane of Jhansi. This girl, barely 20 years of age, has been all her life inured in the seraglio, and like most Asiatic women in the same position, gave herself up to the most extreme licentiousness. Her rooms, it is said, when entered by the troops, were hung with pictures such as pleased Tibertus at Capri.

Whatever her vices she had energy and courage, and while Tantia Tope prepared for flight she led her own retainers and some Sepoys to the attack. They refused, however, to stand in the plain, and retreated towards the low hills, and finally on the Phoolbagh. Two troops of the 8th Hussars followed at speed through a narrow ravine to the camp, and there drove a body of the fugitives to bay. The Rane and her sister, in men's clothes, headed the defence, and were both slain in the first charge. The Hussars were all armed with revolvers, which did terrible execution. Some 400 of the enemy were killed, the tents were set on fire, and it was not till the little band had spiked three of the guns and found themselves enveloped by the rebels that they retired. They had lost five men, and about 10 more perished from sun-stroke and fatigue. In the evening Sir Hugh Rose, with the Central India field force, joined the Brigadier. On the following morning the enemy again attacked, but after a desperate struggle were driven back by Her Majesty's 95th. The 86th were advanced to support, and both regiments, half mad with excitement, charged the enemy up the hill under a heavy fire, seized a standing camp at the top, and awaited orders. Sir Hugh Rose moved his cavalry and artillery up the hill, and the Sepoys, disheartened by the loss of the position, by the death of their only capable leader, and by the appearance of reinforcements, showed symptoms of confusion. They were observed by Sir Hugh Rose, the whole army was let loose and swept down into the plain. The enemy fled, the city and standing camp were seized, and the fort alone remained. During the night this also was deserted, except by some fanatics, who next morning charged on the 25th, the Bombay Native Infantry. They were all killed, with the loss of Lieutenant Rose on our side, and the fort was won on our hands. On the same day, the Maharajah, escorted by the Hussars, was conveyed to his Palace amid the acclamations of the people. His officers returned to their duties, his harem arrived in safety, and on the 22d the traces of the revolution had disappeared from Gwalior. The enemy fled, part towards Jyepore, and part to Jouna, north-west of the city. Thither they were followed by Colonel Napier, the officer selected to command the force during the illness of Sir Hugh Rose. Cumbered with guns which they would rather desert nor defend, they overtook the 22d, and the whole of their artillery, 25 pieces, fell into our hands. Sixteen more were taken in the Lunkhara on the 19th, and the enemy are reduced to a few light camel guns, not of much use against the Minis. The remaining division was sent to the Minis. has subsided again. Lej Sing, the rebel Rajah of the last named district, has surrendered, only stipulating for a trial before execution, and there is a general change of zone in the North-west. Oude is now the last hope of the insurgents. Everywhere else their military power is shattered or destroyed. Tantia Tope, who alone has an army, has no guns. The petty leaders who in almost every district keep up anarchy and render the collection of revenue impossible have no military power. Umru Singh, who is harassing Behar, has not 1,000 men left. The 6,000 rebels at Soran, near Allahabad, are only formidable because they can escape when threatened into Oude. Koor Singh is dead. The Rane of Jhansi has been killed. The Moulvie, who commanded at Mahmood, has been decapitated by the zemindar of Powasen, the Nana is skulking, and Feroze Shah the Delhi Prince, does not venture to leave Oude. He, I am told, is now at the house of the mutineers, and as the last son of the house of Timour commands the sympathies of all Mahomedans.

On the 4th inst. the position is as bad as it can well be. There are regular armies at Bareilly, at Fyzabad, at Khyrabad, and moving along the southern frontier. We hold only the capital and Nawabganj, where Sir H. Grant on the 13th inst. gained a victory. The Begum and her paramour, Mumoo Khan, had advanced too near the capital. Sir H. Grant therefore resolved to disperse them. The Sepoys attempted to defend a small bridge over a ravine, but slunk away under the fire of the Horse Artillery. Sir H. Grant crossed, but only to find himself attacked by a mob of armed badmashes, the generic name in India for men who in Europe were once called “bravos.” These men, actuated by some unwholesome caprice, stood up to the contest in the open plain, met the 6th Rifles hand to hand, and almost beat back a cavalry charge. They were, however, dispersed with the loss of seven guns, and the Begum disappeared. In all other districts British authority is powerless. Maun Singh is besieged near Fyzabad for being supposed friendly to the British, and all zemindars who express a willingness to submit are massacred. The scene is a painful one, but we can do nothing till the arrival of the cold weather and of the reinforcements expected in October.

Your readers must not imagine that because Oude is the last province left to conquer the other provinces of the North-West are at peace. Except in Rohilcud and the Delhi division there is no peace anywhere. In Delhi the wonderful organizing faculty of Sir John Lawrence has re-established regular government, and there is as much order as in the Punjab. In Rohilcud the landholders have submitted, and are hunting the Sepoys. Everywhere else order is maintained only by the sabre's edge, and the revenue is collected by military force. A wide amnesty is, however, to be issued in a few days in Bundelcud, and that province will be closed against intrigue. In the remaining districts we are slowly organizing bands of light horse, chiefly Sikh, and with the reconquest of Oude the last hope of the Pandares will be taken away. We shall then have leisure for that reorganization which has become so indispensable. The Commander-in-Chief has officially confirmed the statement that his plan of the campaign was overruled by the Governor-General. There is some nonsense talked in India about this. Since the empire was founded the Governor-General has always planned the campaign. Warren Hastings never consulted anybody, except when he had Sir Eyre Coote by his side, and Dalhousie must certainly draw up his own plans, and used to write terrible letters to urge General Godwin, in Pegu, to adhere to them, instead of to his somewhat antiquated ideas of warfare. In truth, it cannot be otherwise. The Governor-General is, and must be, an absolute sovereign, and to give the Commander-in-Chief the power to dictate in all military arrangements is simply to create two rulers.

“We have had news from Behar. After his successes at Jyepore, Sir E. Lugard's force was broken up, Brigadier Douglas moved to Benares, and he himself to Jyepore. The enemy, who had retreated towards Benares, immediately doubled back and made for Jyepore. Colonel Douglas was recalled, but was unable to move, having only about 90 Europeans fit for duty. The rebels near Sherghatty encountered a body of 150 Europeans, sent under escort to Sassaram. The Nugeeb guard of 50 men, recently levied, immediately fraternized, murdered the Darogah, and released the prisoners. The rebels then divided, Amer Singh proceeding to Jyepore, while a detachment invaded Gya. The former compelled Captain Rattray, with his Sikhs, who had been left by Sir E. Lugard to watch the jungle, to retreat, and began murdering the coolies who were cutting roads. They mutilated a number, and the remainder fled. One unhappy wretch was seen by a European—I can prove this—buried up to his neck, for the lites to pick out his eyes. He was quite dead. All natives serving with Government are threatened with the same treatment, till there has been a general panic among the troops. The latter body marched to Gya, bribed the gaol guard, released the prisoners, and left the town, which they were afraid to attack. They are now near Tikaree, apparently besieging the Rane, an old lady of enormous wealth. The people are not by any means disposed to side with them, but they seem cowed, and in the last four months 9,000 of them have arrived in Calcutta on their way to the Mutineers. They bring their women, a thing they never would do before, and what probably settles in the island. The colonial Government are still crying for more, and what with our own troops, Amer Singh, and emigration, society in Bhojpoor will be as much changed as society in Comaguit.

The necessity of defending Bengal seems at last to be recognized. We have now 2,600 men in Calcutta, 1,700 in Dumdum, 900 in Barrackpore, and 1,200 sailors scattered over some 13 stations. These men have been just attached to the Indian navy, thereby coming under martial law, and are to be increased to 2,000. A force of European policemen are also, it is said, to be organized in each division, the divisional battalions being abandoned as unsafe instruments. It is still necessary, however, to organize a native force for Behar, where we have obviously not sufficient strength to keep down the armed classes.

of sculpture had been intrusted to Sir Edwin Landseer. It is almost superfluous to comment on this astounding illustration of the wrong man in the wrong place. Edwin Landseer is justly considered as at the very height of his profession; his reputation as a painter of animal life is such that it is almost impossible to exaggerate it, and upholding his great name as a painter, we cannot complain from expressing the most unfeigned surprise, if such a commission should have been given to him. It is, we need say, that he should have accepted it. Sir Edwin never had a chisel in his hand in his life, and never yet, we believe, attempted to model anything.

The present Lord of the Barony of Kemez, the 234 in direct descent from Martin, the first Lord, still exercises, after the lapse of eight centuries, and with the authority of Her Majesty's Courts at Westminster, the most important privileges of a Lord Marcher; Kemez still maintains in all public documents its title of "Barony," and is, I believe, the last and only Lord Marcher now in the kingdom. The yearly appointment of the mayor of the corporate town of Newport is still vested in the holder of this feudal tenure.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant, present Lord of the Barony of Femes, the 23d in direct descent from Martin, the first Lord, still exercises, after the lapse of eight centuries, and with the authority of Her Majesty's Courts at Westminster, the most important privileges of a Lord Marcher; Kemes still maintains in all public documents its title of "Baron," and, I believe, the last and only Lord Marcher now in the kingdom, the yearly appointment of the mayor of the corporate town of Newport is still vested in the holder of this feudal tenure.

I AM, Sir, your obedient servant,
CAMBRÉNSIS.
