The PREFACE to the Seventh Volume.

WE are now come in the Process of about an Year and a half, to the close of the Seventh Volume of our Athenian Mercury. Those who are for Observing Numbers, have generally agreed that there is something sacred in the Septenary, or at least something very remarkable: As to the latter, we are sure that 't has been more so to us than any of the rest, that we have struggled harder in it with several Adversaries, and we are not at all displeas'd that we can assure the World they are at last silent, and like just and honest Men have left the Design to be wholly manag'd by the first Undertakers.

All we have besides to acquaint the Publick with, is, that we are now more at leisure to consider of any Difficulties before us: That having a great many abstruse and ingenious Mathematical Questions upon the Board, in order to dispatch 'em with all convenient speed, we are resolv'd to insert one or more in every Mercury, 'till they are quite clear'd, and that we still flatter our selves, we shall give 'em more satisfaction in the ensuing Volume than in any of those wherewith we have already presented them.

Several Gentlemen that live in the Countrey still complaining that they can never see the Answers given to their Questions in our Twelve Numbers or Supplements to 'em, we think fit to give Notice that for the future we shall continue our Weekly Mercuries to Number 30. and finish each Volume in that Method.
